An independent player serving public digital technology

- Inetum Software leaves the Inetum group and becomes Nexpublica, a new independent player.
- Nexpublica aims to put technological innovation at the service of better living together. The company relies on 1,200 employees committed across all territories to public authorities.
- Nexpublica, a French software publisher and a reference player in Tech, is committed to all its clients: public sector, semi-public sector, delegates, and private companies.

A new experience for public services in a digital world

Inetum Software becomes Nexpublica, an independent publisher and leader in public Tech. This transformation marks a strong commitment to secure, interoperable, and efficient digital technology, designed to modernize public action and improve the management and access to services.

The company is convinced that digital technology is a strategic lever to improve the experience of citizens, agents, efficiency, security, and reliability of public services. To meet this challenge, Nexpublica, which aims to become the undisputed leader in the public sector, structures its new strategy around four priorities:

1. Proximity and Collaboration: Bringing citizens and public services closer together, improving coordination between actors.
2. Human issues and Talent management: Supporting the evolution of agents' skills and enhancing the attractiveness of the public service.
3. Continuous Innovation: Relying on technological advances, particularly artificial intelligence, to enhance the efficiency of public services.
4. Security and Sovereignty: Ensuring the sovereignty and security of public data to ensure the continuity of essential services.

"We are pleased to announce today the birth of a new company. We are refocusing our activity and accelerating our independence with the mission of supporting the transformation of public service. Our goal, by strengthening already proven digital solutions, resulting from innovation and acquisitions, is twofold: to provide a global platform in response to the current and future challenges of our clients and to offer a new digital experience for all audiences." - Martin Hubert, President of Nexpublica.

A legacy of innovation by and for the public sector

Originally created by the Caisse des Dépôts, Nexpublica has always supported the evolution of digital public service by developing efficient, modern, and secure software. Each major transformation of the administration has shaped its expertise, and each innovation proposed by the company has contributed to structuring the public services of tomorrow.

This commitment is based on the expertise of 1,200 employees deeply attached to the general interest and public affairs. A return to the roots for the company, which refocuses on its historical activity. Nexpublica leverages its experience with private clients to offer innovative software solutions to public actors.
